Education

If you like working with young people, consider teaching middle school, junior high, or high school in a subject which impacts lives. As a teacher in FCS, you will share important life lessons with youth, including nutrition, resource management, healthy relationships and child care.

Career Opportunities

- FCS teacher – middle, junior high or high school
- Business or Industry Professional trainer
- Cooperative Extension Education/4-H Specialist
- Education Consultant
- Family Finance Consultant
- Government Affairs Specialist
- Legislative Lobbyist
- Occupational and Career Technical Education Counselor

Is the FCS Education option for you?

Family and Consumer Sciences education prepares students with the knowledge and skills for personally satisfying professions working with diverse individuals and families in educational settings. Students become competent in communicating ideas effectively and helping diverse populations learn and grow. Students learn to teach a wide variety of subject content using critical thinking, practical reasoning, active learning, and hands-on learning strategies.

By combining a knowledge of education, lifespan development, and teaching process with an understanding of individual and family development, as well as family systems, students can earn a degree and become licensed teachers in Family and Consumer Sciences.
